

Choosing the best flea treatment

Having a dog also means that you need to deal with annoying fleas. Fleas can survive off of the blood of your dog and it is often hard to see them on your dog due to their fur. Fleas can also cause your dog to become anemic due to losing so much blood and they can transmit some pretty tough viruses into your dog. If your dog has allergies or sensitive to flea bites, your pet can have a severe allergic reaction which can cause baldness, intense itch as well as inflammation throughout your pet's body. There are a lot of dog owner that are very confused right now as to what flea treatment to choose from the wide varieties of flea control products available in the market today. Flea comb, flea sprays, natural products, topical spot-on solutions, oral growth regulator or "birth control" pills for the fleas are only some of the flea treatment products available in the market.

Even if you don't want it, your pets can pick up fleas everywhere particularly when your pets are outdoors. Even the well kept pets will be a host to fleas at some point in their lives. You can't be sure that your dogs will not pick up any fleas. There is very little you can do to prevent this from happening because fleas can be found almost anywhere just waiting for a host to pass by but there are some things you can still do to prevent fleas from propagating in your home.

A special type of comb called flea comb can help you in keeping your dog free from fleas. Use the flea comb everyday especially after your pets have been outside during hot weather in order to dislodge fleas from your dog's coat. Adding a little bit of oil onto the comb spines is very effective in catching those little parasites because they get caught or trapped to the comb. Do not forget to have a bowl of hot water close by when you do this easy trick so that you can instantly place any fleas directly into the water whenever you catch one. Behind your pet's ears, spots in between their toes, the fur in their armpits, as well as under the neck are the spots that you check. Placing a white cloth under your dog during combing can help you to easily see fleas. Do not expect to kill or eradicate all the fleas in your pet since fleas are very hard to catch.

Pure alcohol can help you in stunning the fleas as you brush out so you can effortlessly dump them into a cup of water to die. Empty the mug down the toilet to make sure that any fleas do not make it out. Regularly giving baths to our dog can also reduce your dog's flea problems but not when you are dealing with a major flea's infestation. There are dog owners who prefer using special shampoos in the market that is made to killing fleas but these products are usually too toxic to use every day. Some alternative products available commercially are rosewood, cedar, or eucalyptus is better choice than relying on other commercial products to take care of minor flea problems. Another alternative in dealing with minor flea problem is cutting up lemons and squeezing the juice into a quart of water is, after it settles in a few hours you can put it into a clean spray bottle. A little spray across the body is usually enough to solve minor flea problem of your dog, just remember to avoid getting any spray into the eyes of your dog.

Bring your dog to a veterinarian when your dog's flea problem has reached to flea infestation level. A vet can properly analyze your pet's condition and prescribe the best medication for the flea infestation. There are also a lot of products available in the market that is safe to use in your home and also safe for your pets like a diatomaceous earth. This is one of the cheapest ways to handle flea problems in your home. Advantage and Frontline can wipe out adult fleas and prevents outbreak for up to 3 months. You just need a few drops onto your pet's shoulder and the special chemical will spread and cure on its own. Advantage and Frontline has little toxicity which makes it safe for your pet. These products are both harsh to pest but gentle to your pet's sensitive skin. Whether Advantage or Frontline, you can be confident that your purchased item will completely eliminate the bugs on your pet's skin. Be careful in handling such substances because these chemicals can do damage to you or your pet if used improperly. Ask your vet before you buy and use any product. Flea control products on the market are not the same so choose one that best suitable for your pet's condition. Each has their own levels of success and kill different flea stages i.e. the eggs, larvae, and adults. One product may be effective against the adult fleas but is simply harmless to the eggs or larvae.

If your pet has a bad flea infestation then you may need a combination of these products to effectively get rid of those pesky fleas. Try to research on other alternative products or methods in controlling and eliminating fleas. There are many flea control methods you might haven't tried before so research! Your choice of a flea treatment medicine or method for your dog is very essential because it determines the success or failure in your battle against these pesky fleas.
