- 2.Surfing from one free work at home job board and home-based career sites to the next in search of real jobs from home
- 3.Chasing after and buying into promises of "easy money" and "quick riches"
- 4.Auto-submitting your resumes to thousands of unknown employers for a free work at home job
- 5.Searching for free work at home jobs which allow them to make the most amount of money with the least amount of effort
- 6.Believing that their job search begins the moment they send out their resumes
- 7.Applying for free work at home jobs for which you do not possess the necessary skills or experience
- 8.Applying only for advertised free work at home jobs
- 9.And paying an "employer" for a supposedly free work at home job.

Believe it or not, but it has been said that 95% of free work at home job seekers engage in the above-mentioned activities which turn out to be as unproductive as they are costly.
