

Normal Doggie Behaviors

Prior to anything one must remember that dogs are animals and they should never be humiliated or punished for doing what comes naturally to him instead they should be dealt with care. Excessive behavioral patterns displayed that could be surprising and upsetting sometime should be dealt with love and proper training.

To help you to deal with your new dog here are some of the expected normal doggie behavior guidelines:

1. The sense of territoriality exist in the blood of the dog whether you find them in the street or at home because they have evolved from wild animals and will defend their home and yard or anything belonging to their owners from the strangers by barking or growling. If anything excess is displayed in this area then there is a need for training otherwise it is normal behavior.
2. Barking is their way to communicate to other dogs, to their owners, to strangers who they feel threatens them. Besides this they also bark if they hear any strange noise at any hour of the day warning of something unusual. If this type of barking pattern exist in your dog then your dog is normal but if your new dog bark too much then getting trained by a professional is required or you can opt for barking collars especially designed to help correct a dog's excessive barking.
3. The desire to keep their food for themselves is found to be very strong even in the smallest dog which is a very natural behavior. Teasing the dog for such behavior may be fatal, so it is recommended to feed your dog in a quiet location free of distractions. Beside your dog your children must also be taught how to behave while he is eating to avoid potential nips or bites.
4. Dogs explore their world by chewing anything that comes to their way. They love to chew and gnaw anything they are supplied with toys for example Rawhide chews and plastic chew of his own. This is nothing abnormal but anything excessive needs care.
5. If trained properly then your dog will urinate and defecate where they are told to do but sometimes under certain circumstances your dog will urinate or defecate where they should not. Punishing them will make the situation worse that will only make the dog more nervous and possibly cause more errors in the future. Make sure the dog has plenteous opportunities to go outside.
6. Nipping and Biting are normal in dog and they do to protect themselves from harm. If this behavior is excessive then it is imperative to take steps to stop it before it becomes a real problem.

Understanding and dealing with your dog's behavior is necessary for a new pet owner's happiness with their new friend.
