For beginners, backgammon is fun and easy to learn. The goal is to move your checkers round the board into your home, keeping them safe all the while from your opponent. The game is played with two dice, and a third dice - the doubling or gambling cube - can be added to make things more interesting.

Backgammon is played on a board with 24 black and white triangles, and each player moves his checkers in opposite directions. Any singles checkers can be 'hit' by the other side, so it's important to keep them together - if you get caught, you end up in jail, and have to roll the dice to get out.

Online backgammon is so convenient, and best of all it's free! You can start playing right away, whenever you feel like it. Most sites give you the option of either playing online or downloading software to play at your leisure.

Once you've got some practice playing backgammon online, you can start playing for money and even enter backgammon tournaments.

If you're interested in playing backgammon for money, it's a good idea to read up on some tips before you start. New players can also find explanations of the rules and glossaries to decipher backgammon jargon.

And for serious players, you can download software that monitors your backgammon game, and tells you where you went wrong - a great way of improving your skills.

Playing backgammon online is a fun way to meet people from all round the world. You're never short of someone to challenge to a game, and you can also discuss strategies, and chat while you play on many sites.

Backgammon may be a game, but there are serious amounts of money involved in online tournaments.
